SALT METHODS.

In the Marshes of the Kongo and at One of the sights of the Great Salt lake of Utah, developed by the progress of scientific industry, is the system of immense salt making ponds on the shore of the lake. At Saltair the lake water is pumped into a great settling basin, where the impurities fall to the bottom and, containing much iron, form a reddish deposit. From this basin the water is drawn off inte-"harvesting ponds" averaging 90,000 square yards in area and six inches in depth. The ponds are kept supplied with water, as the evaporation goes on from May to September, when the salt harvest begins. The water having disappeared, a dazzling layer of salt two or three inches thick is found covering the bottom of the ponds, which is broken up with plows before being conveyed to the mills, where the final crushing and winnowing are done.

In general the salt marshes of the Kongo region represent a kind of pocket or rift in the soil. They are to be found in considerable numbers in the district of Sambalt, and there are also many of these marshes on the left bank of the river Lufubu. The walls of the rift show first a layer of blackish clay mixed with sand and containing numerous quartz and silex pebbles or more exceptionally black and white shells, fragments of oyster and mussel. Then comes a layer of stratified and gray blue schist. The soil of the depression also contains schist as the greater constituent and is covered by a layer of sandy clay. In order to collect the salt the natives dig a funnel shaped hole from six to ten feet warm and clear water, which is istrongly charged with salt. It comes liquid seems to boll. The salt is partly precipitated at the bottom of the cay blackish mud. The latter is washed but with hot water to extract the salt, which is then crystallized from the solution. The product which is thus obtained is of a salty gray color, and its taste is more alkaline than that of European salt.

FRANKING.

Way the Privilege Has Bee Abused In England.

American legislators are not the only ones who abuse their franking privi leges. Recent history in England has a great number of the inhabitants savcaused the London Chronicle to say "Franking had its birth, honestly enough, in 1660, in the desire to relieve members of parliament of the expense incurred in the discharge of their nacional duties, but the practice rapidly videned until it became possible for members to transmit their household goods at the public charge, as the following extract from old postoffice records testifies: 'Fifteen couple of hounds going to the king of Romans with a free pass, two maidservants going as laundresses to my Lord Ambassador Methuen, Dr. Crichton, carrying with him a cow and divers necessaries; three suits of clothes for some nobleman's lady at the court of Portugal, two bales of stockings for the use of the ambassador to the crown of Portugal, a deal case with four flitches of bacon for Mr. Pennington of Rotter-

"This form of abuse died when the postoffice stable underwent a purification, but it speedily gave place to another variety. Members signed packets of letters wholesale, gave them away to their friends and sometimes paid their servants' wages in franked en-velopes. In fact, they became a valua-ble form of currency, subject to the art of the lorger, who did a roaring trade, 1715 £24,000 worth of free corre spondence passed through the postof

"Fifty years later the nation was staggered to discover that the amount had increased to £170,000, and stringent laws were passed to mitigate the immoral tendencies of the houses of parliament. But all was in vain until fresh, is laden with the pestiferous Sir Rowland Hifl managed in 1839 to miasma. In winter the atmosphere beabrogate the privileges altogether."

Who first found tin? There is a legend among the Cornish miners that St. Piran, an Irish hermit, was the discoverer. His ancient church in the parish of Perranzabulce, in Cornwall, fald bare of sand by the sea many full well know! and practice.-Exyears ago, has recently been repaired. Cornish miners still keep the feast of St. Piran, who, according to the fable. first found tin, forgetting that their forefathers had long previously sold it to the Phoenicisus. Possibly the legend points to the fact that this Irishman was a skillful metallurgist.

DESTRUCTION OF POMPEIL Burled So Deep That It Was Lost

For Sixteen Centuries. When one hears of a buried city it is very difficult to realize what it can look like-still more so to realize how a city can be buried so deep as to be utterly lost and the place of it know it no more for sixteen centuries. Yet this is what happened to Pompeii and Herculaneum, Stabiae and Retina and thirteen other cities of the plain on the ninth day before the calends of September, in the first year of the reign of the Emperor Titus. Thus it was when Pompeli was buried. When next the sun shone into her streets George III. was king of England. Sixteen years before the burial of the city an earthquake had done so much mischief that the ruin was not vet quite restored, but Mount Vesuvius had been quiet ever since. The 24th of August was a terribly hot day.

Most of the people were in the amphitheater at a wild beast light when they saw a strange cloud rise from-Vesuvius. It seemed like a pine tree. The trunk rose up high into the heavens and then spread out in branchessome white, some dull and spotteduntil, slowly detaching themselves from the parent trunk, they began to darken the sky. Pliny the elder, over at Misenum, was reading in his study when his sister came in to tell him of this strange cloud. He ordered a light galley to be got ready, and as he was coming out with his tablets in his hand ready to note down all he saw the mariners belonging to the galleys at Retina came up to implore of him to go to their help.

By the time Pliny got there with his galleys the ashes were falling thicker every instant. Then came broken and blackened stones and pumice Vast mountain, and the sea had suddenly petreated. The pilot was for putting back, but the undaunted old philosotune," he said, "favors the brave." Everybody knows something about the rest and how the poor old gentleman, being weakly and asthmatic, was suf-focated by a sudden outburst of flames and sulphur fumes. In that awful darkness, when the sudden rush of flames was the only light which pierced the dense smoke, the fields were full of terrified people fleeing they knew not whither. It is true that the deed their lives, and even took away a good deaf of their treasure, but it is estimated that at least 200,000 persons were entombed in Pompeti, Herculaneum and the other cities of the plain.
